What is CED doing to improve the lives of people with disabilities?

The WVU Center for Excellence in Disabilities (CED) has a variety of program offerings to help individuals with disabilities be as independent as possible in their own communities. Most programs work with individuals outside of the medical setting to help ensure that they remain as independent as possible and are able to participate fully in their lives.

The CED supports eight programs and four clinical services that work to improve the quality of life for people with disabilities.

Our detailed five-year work plan proposes services and activities that represent four areas of need:

1. Quality health care
   Increase percentage of individuals with disabilities who have access to quality health care services.

2. Employment
   Increase percentage of individuals with disabilities who are employed in integrative, minimum wage or higher positions.

3. Health and wellness
   Improve quality of life and health of individuals with disabilities in West Virginia through targeted programming, training, and research designed to increase autonomy, self-efficacy, and choice and reduce unhealthy risk behaviors and select health concerns.

4. Transitional planning and supports
   Support successful transitions for individuals with disabilities who are transitioning from: 1) a home or school/learning setting; 2) a post-secondary to higher education and/or work setting; OR 3) caregivers who are planning to transition their dependents in the later stages of their lives.
